

Brain Aging International Journal - BAIJ is the vehicle of the updated scientific knowledge on the developments in brain aging, due to its scientific editorial board composed by some of the most renowned scientists in Alzheimer's disease and other related dementias. BAIJ is also a publishing pioneer in brain aging prevention. The journal explains in a comprehensible manner the way to achieve a healthy brain aging, the key of a healthy aging of the body as a whole.

BAIJ publishes editorials, advanced research studies, clinical cases, ethical aspects from the professions and sciences in the field, and also keeps you updated with the international agenda of all the relevant scientific events. We encourage the young researchers to publish their research studies or reviews. The Academy will reward yearly the most valuable works.

BAIJ welcomes you to be part of the international effort for the scientific excellence and the healthy brain aging in 21st century.

On July 19, 1938, Stefan Zweig introduced Salvador Dali to Sigmund Freud at the 82-year-old psychoanalyst's home on Elsworthy Road. As they talked, Dali began to sketch Freud, and the latter turned to author Stefan Zweig, who had arranged the get-together, and whispered, "That boy looks like a fanatic — small wonder that they have a civil war in Spain if they look like that". The remark delighted Dali when he was told afterward. To Dali, Freud fretted, "In the paintings of the Old Masters one immediately tends to look for the unconscious, whereas, when one looks at a surrealist painting, one immediately has the urge to look for the conscious".

BRAIN AGING

INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL

"The desire to survive and the fear of death are artistic sentiments."
Salvador Dali

Hypothesis-driven research and the 'omic' era.
Weinstein's synergism.

1

Functional predictors of Mild Cognitive Impairment to Alzheimer's Disease progression

16

How to activate your brain

51